
HENRY MARTYN MULDER, Econometric Institute, Erasmus Universiteit, Rotterdam

Axiomatic characterization of location functions

Since Kenneth Arrow's ground-breaking work on consensus in 1951 this has been a major area in mathematical economics: how to reach consensus in a rational way. This is modeled by a consensus function that satisfies certain natural and intuitively pleasing axioms. We survey recent and new results on a special type of consensus: finding an optimal location, such as the center, the median, and the mean.