
DANNY DYER, Memorial University of Newfoundland

Fast searching graphs with few searchers

The edge search number of a graph is defined as the minimum number of cops needed to catch a fast invisible robber that may rest on a graph's vertices or edges. The fast search number is the minimum number of cops needed to capture such a robber in as few moves as possible. Paralleling the development of the edge search number, we will discuss graphs that require at most 3 cops to guarantee capture.