

---

PATRICIA EVANS, University of New Brunswick

Finding RNA structure motifs

This talk examines computational problems based on comparing RNA sequences with respect to their bond structure. We include an overview of the different computational models and input characteristics which arise in different applications, and pay particular attention to ones applicable to finding structure motifs, considering which restrictions make the problem tractable and lead to efficient algorithms.