
PETER BARR, Wake Forest University

A transport redundancy approach to clustering

In this talk, we consider a new random walks-based method for measuring clustering on finite graphs. The method is versatile and can provide valuable insight into the locations of centers of clusters and outliers. Some results and applications are discussed. This work is in collaboration with K. S. Berenhaut and M. Gao.